The Lion Tamer's Peril.

Coup's show was at Towarda last week. At the close of the concert an extiting to the court red long to be remembered by these preser'. It is the custom after the corcert is over to feed the animals in the presence of the audience. The den of Prof. McDonald's performing lions is so constructed by swinging iron gates from the back of the cage that each animal has an spartment to itself while feeding. Everything was scoure and the meat placed in position by means of an iron fork, the animals seizing their food and drawing it through the bars of the

After they are done feeding the gitts are again thrown back leaving them together in parmony. It sometimes occurs that the anima! will not devour all the food allotted him, which would be removed before the gates are opened placing them in one department. It is customary in all menageries to omit feeding one day each week. Animals thrive better to fas: one day in the week. Consequently they are more ferceious and more anxious for their food after heir twenty four hours' fasting.

Oa the day stated the don was divided in the usual manner, the large African iton, "Ned," is one end, the Asiatic lipoets in the centre, and the powerful leopard in other end, and their food provided. "N:d" quickly finished his repast and retired to his corner, seemingly satisfied; the leopard also finished his men'; out the lioness retired to a corner of her apariment leaving a portion of her meat near the gate which separated her from the leopard. The attendants neglected to remove the meat which the lioness had left and opened the gate which separated her from "Nad." Just as the iron gate fell back to its place the leopard cspied the mest nesr the bars of the cen're apartment and aprang to drag it through the gate. "Ned" anticipated this movement and on the meat. A terrible struggle cosued, Prof. McDonald was at this time attending to other duties, but was immediately called. All that has ever been necessary bef ro in such an emergency was simply for the professor to speak and "Ned" would at once yield to his master. This time, however, he paid no attention to se!f. McDonald took the large feeding fork and tried to force the mest from him, but without avail. With the determination that a trave man can place himself in the jaws of death in performing his duty, McDonald made prepararion to enter the den, remarking as he did so, You or I must be master." The instant Me Donald closed the door behind him, "Nea" aprang upon him, and with claws extended strack him a terrible blow in the breast, tearing his vest and shirt and licerating his flish. The blow staggered him to the end of the eige, where he slipped and fell on the greas; flor. An attendant, thinking to assist him, took him by the foot and pulled him near the door, and again "Nea" struck him on the thigh, tearing overalls, pants, underwear and flish in a frightful mapper. Children screamed, ladies fainted and strong men stood paralyzed, with lips compressed and faces white as snow. The only one that was calm and collected was the "Lion King" in his terrible prison. He regained his feet, and with blood flowing from his breast and thigh, his clothing torn into shreds, he stood for a moment looking at his lavorite who had retired again with his meat under his paw. No one can over forget the look of mingled dignity. pride and affection depicted on his features as he said, in an authorizative and loving voice.

"Ned, what are you doing? Do you mean to kill mo, your best friend?" It really seems that the "king of the fores." understood every word this man said, and, tooking at him a moment, "Ned" dropped his eyes, and with his par shoved the meat from him, which said as plaic as words could speak, "I surrender." McDoorld approached him and, calling for his stool, scated himself beside his "noble friend." "Ned" then licked the blood from his master's wounds. - Towanda, Pa., Republican.

THE FUTURE OF MEMPHIS. - Looking beyond the present season of trial, the future of Memphis seems gloomy enough. As the reports show, many merchants are removing their tustness toesfer leculities; a multitude of laborers and employees must fillow them; and it is not reasonable to suppose that they will reture .-The majority of those who go new will endeavor to establish themselves elsewhere, and, with all the advantages of position, years must pass before the city will again be able even under the most favorable circumstenses to show a population as lage or that which is now leaving her. I is possible, if not probable, that this lost ground will never be regained-that the deadly breath of the pestilence has blighted the town past all recovery. There is a vast amount of capital invested in buildings and improvements which can not be removed; but the value of these has been greatly impaired, and the danger of reappearance of the plague will discourage owners from making the ffort necessary to fully restore it .- Chicago Times,

The Prince Imperial rode into the danger, it is said, like a therough French cavalier, with leuzhter in his eyes and a jest upon his tongce. and he died with the came of his country among his last recorded words. He left Ecgland, too, in the most buoyant and sanguine spirits, telling his friends that he would see them in the course of the year, when he hoped to have been sole to show that he was a good soldier.
